

Blerdly Labs

Chanda Mandisa, PhD

Executive Summary

Blerdly Labs is a pioneering think tank dedicated to Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DEI) in technology and innovation. Our mission is to amplify the voices and contributions of underrepresented communities, particularly Black professionals and enthusiasts in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM). Through research, advocacy, and collaboration, Blerdly Labs seeks to create equitable opportunities and drive systemic change in tech, entrepreneurship, and education.

Problem Statement

The tech industry continues to struggle with diversity, equity, and inclusion, with significant barriers preventing Black professionals and other underrepresented groups from accessing opportunities, funding, and leadership positions. There is a lack of structured support for Black innovators, entrepreneurs, and researchers to develop and scale groundbreaking ideas. Blerdly Labs aims to address this gap by fostering a space for collaboration, knowledge-sharing, and action-oriented research to drive meaningful DEI progress in STEM.

Solution

Blerdly Labs provides a dynamic platform for research, strategic development, and advocacy in DEI-focused innovation. Our think tank supports:

Research & Policy Development

Conducting studies and publishing reports on DEI challenges and solutions in tech and entrepreneurship.

Community Engagement & Education

Hosting workshops, panels, and mentorship programs to support Black innovators and professionals.

Strategic Collaborations

Partnering with organizations, institutions, and businesses to implement actionable DEI strategies.

Innovation Incubation

Supporting early-stage ideas and ventures by underrepresented founders through advisory services and resource access.

Business Model

Blerdly Labs operates as a mission-driven think tank funded through crowdfunding campaigns, including the purchase of this proposal on Gumroad. Additional revenue streams may include grants, research partnerships, and sponsorships for DEI-focused initiatives. Our goal is to remain independent while securing financial sustainability through community and institutional support.

Market Analysis

Our target audience includes:

- Black professionals, entrepreneurs, and researchers in STEM.
- Tech companies and organizations seeking to improve DEI initiatives.
- Educational institutions supporting diverse student engagement in STEM.
- Investors and policymakers interested in fostering inclusive innovation.

Our competitors include traditional DEI consulting firms and advocacy groups, but Blerdly Labs differentiates itself by offering a data-driven, innovation-focused, and community-powered approach to systemic change.

Marketing Strategy

To amplify our impact and reach, Blerdly Labs will employ a multi-faceted marketing approach:

- Content marketing featuring research insights, case studies, and thought leadership.
- Social media advocacy to engage audiences in DEI conversations.
- Strategic partnerships with institutions and community organizations.
- Community-driven initiatives such as hackathons, panels, and networking events.

- A robust online presence via our website: <https://blerdlylabs.neocities.org/>.

Financial Plan

Blerdly Labs will focus on sustainable funding through crowdfunding, research grants, and sponsorships. Funds raised through Gumroad and community support will be allocated to research, programming, and advocacy efforts.

Conclusion

Blerdly Labs stands at the intersection of DEI and technological innovation, working to bridge gaps in access, representation, and opportunity for Black professionals in STEM. By fostering a data-driven, collaborative, and action-oriented approach, we aim to create long-lasting impact in the tech ecosystem. For updates, visit <https://blerdlylabs.neocities.org/>.
